This could be a "banner" year for local businesses.

Well, banner in the sense that the city's Downtown Development Authority is offering to place the name and logo of businesses on street banners that will be displayed on Jos. Campau between Caniff and Holbrook.

The banners have been popular in the past, and it's first-come, first-serve to get yours, so hurry up.

To display a banner for one year it costs $275, and for three years it's only $100 more at $375. The cost includes a replacement banner if it gets damaged.

Orders must be completed by May 29. To reserve your banner call Kathy Angerer at (313) 876-7700, extension 326, or email her at hamtramckdda@gmail.com.

— HAMTRAMCK'S NEWSPAPER OF RECORD —

On the rocky road to citywide street repairs

By Charles Sercombe

Hamtramck got a taste on Friday of what's to come in repairing potholes.

The city tested out a different method in fixing potholes that seals in asphalt, starting on Charest from Holbrook to Evaline and then up to Gallagher and back to Holbrook.

"It's much better than cold patching," said Mark Ragsdale, the Director of Public Works. "It's going to last longer and look better."

The city used the cold patching method in only the worst areas during the winter in order to wait to use this newer method.

For many residents it's been a long wait.

The pothole repairs coincide with a recent report submitted by an engineering company that ranks each street's condition, from one to 10, with "10" being the very best, as in brand new.

There will be some sections of streets that will require ripping out the concrete and repaving. One such spot is 200 feet worth of Goodson, which City Manager Katrina Powell estimated will cost $80,200.

Ragsdale said he is reviewing the engineering study and will make his recommendations on how to proceed. No matter what, pothole repairs will start back up next week, he said.

Last Friday the city tested out a new way to fix potholes. Repairs will continue while a long-range plan is worked out for all of the city's streets.

Voters say 'no' to road repair tax

By Charles Sercombe

Hamtramck voters joined with voters statewide in rejecting a ballot proposal to raise the sales tax to fix roads.

Statewide, voters gave the proposal a thumping by 80 percent – a margin of disapproval that hasn't happened in 50 years, The Detroit News reported. In Hamtramck the margin of defeat was equally bad, by 75 percent.

Only 913 voters bothered voting on the proposal, one of the lowest turnouts in recent history.

Previous polls taken predicted the state proposal was going down by a wide margin.

If it had passed, Hamtramck would have seen almost an additional $1 million in state revenue – something that would have secured the city's finances for many years.

But in various media reports voters had two reasons for turning it down: the funding mechanism was too complicated and the inability of legislators to come up with a plan earlier.

Legislators have been arguing for several years over how to fix the state's increasingly worsening roads, and even Republican legislators disagreed with Gov. Rick Snyder's attempts to come up with a plan.

Snyder, a Republican, had

Nick and Mario Lulgjuraj are once again investing in the city with a redevelopment project on Jos. Campau.

In business and development, it's a family affair

By Charles Sercombe

Last time we checked in with brothers Nick and Mario Lulgjuraj, they were building a new shopping strip at Caniff and Gallagher.

It was done in a modern urban design, which meant the building was up close to the sidewalk and not set back like you see in the suburbs.

That was several years ago and at the time it was a substantial investment. There was concern back then that having parking in the rear would work against the project but that doesn't seem to be the case.

The immediate plan calls for concentrating on emergency lanes that the police and fire department use most of the time. A crew of part-time city workers will also do cold patching, said City Manager Katrina Powell. There will also be a long-range plan mapped out, she added. "The next step is to prepare a transportation asset management plan and identify a five-year capital improvement program to submit to MDOT (Michigan Department of Transportation) for approval," Powell said. "If approved, the city can transfer additional monies from the Major Road Fund to the Local Road Fund to do much needed repairs on our interior streets."

Metro news ...

It's said that whatever happens to Detroit, so goes Hamtramck. Our friends over at modelmedia.com have been reporting on fascinating development projects for the past several years.

With their permission, here is an edited version of this week's story:

On Saturday, May 2, local dignitaries and Eastern Market Corporation officials gathered to celebrate the unveiling of Eastern Market Shed 5 in all its renovated glory. After Detroit mayor Mike Duggan and Sen. Debbie Stabenow took part in the pageantry of the ribbon-cutting ceremony, market-goers explored the renovated shed while Shed 5 vendors saw their patience rewarded.

Shed 5 stayed open and was host to its usual vendors during its three-year renovation. For all the dust and inconveniences vendors weathered during the various rounds of construction, the improvements made to Shed 5 should prove worth it.

The shed was built in 1981 and had seen few improvements since. Because of the recent renovations, Eastern Market Corporation believes that Shed 5 sets a new standard for regional food hubs.

"Shed 5 was functional before the renovations, but now we can really brag about the shed," says Caroline Glidewell-Hoos, marketing and communications manager for Eastern Market Corporation. "For one thing, it will increase attendance in the winter. A lot of people don't realize we're open year-round and now we have a heated indoor shed."

Shed 5 floors are now heated and its doors are reinforced and better suited for keeping the heat in during cold-weather months.

Adding to the Shed 5 experience is the DTE Energy Foundation Plaza. The newly-landscaped public outdoor space on the Russell Street side of the shed will feature special events and entertainment and likely food trucks and other vendors. Also new to Shed 5 is the Kid Rock Kitchen Commons, a large room dedicated for meeting space that can be rented for parties, exercise classes, and other uses. Green Collar Foods has installed a vertical indoor growing system.

One of the biggest additions to Shed 5 is the community kitchen. It's a fully licensed commercial-grade kitchen available to small food businesses and entrepreneurs. The facilities will allow Detroit Kitchen Connect, a group that connects local entrepreneurs with its network of kitchens, to increase capacity and accept more small businesses into its program. A number of Eastern Market vendors, including Chez Chloe and Five Star Cake Company, have come through the Detroit Kitchen Connect program.

anchors the string of stores located there, and it enjoys a steady flow of eager customers.

Now the brothers, who also own and operate Maine Street Restaurant on Jos. Campau, have purchased the shopping strip anchored by Little Caesar's Pizza.

And as usual, expect to see a major improvement in how it looks over there. Renovation of the façade is now underway.

Mario Lulgjuraj didn't want to disclose how much is being invested in the site, but it's part of a long-term strategy he and his brother have for the city.

"We like to be a part of the city," he said. "It has viability, and we're here to say."

The shopping strip is also next-door to Maine Street, on the northern side of the Jos. Campau business district. It's this part of the district that has seen the most activity when it comes to redesign.

You can thank the Lulgjuraj brothers again for that. They also bought the building across from their restaurant where several businesses operate. The Lulgjurajs invested money into improving that building's façade.

You could say they are a two-man urban redevelopment team.

"Hopefully," Mario said, "others will follow."

You heard it building owners, the Lulgjurajs have thrown down a challenge. Anyone want to step up?

City council candidate faces questions over plans for shopping center

By Charles Sercombe

Mayor Karen Majewski has a question for one of the candidates running for city council.

She would like to know what Mohamed Alsomiri plans to do with a building he owns in the middle of the Jos. Campau business district, the former Shoppers World store.

“He has owned the building for about two years and in that time the building has done nothing but deteriorate,” she said recently on her Facebook page. “Maybe voters should ask him what he is doing to revitalize Hamtramck. Feet to the fire.”

The vacant building is the largest commercial structure in the city, and has fallen into disrepair.

Alsomiri, in an interview with The Review, said it’s a matter of money. He said he has a long list of updates and improvements to make, starting with a city-required indoor sprinkler system.

Next on his list he said is a new electrical system and heating unit.

After that he said he will work on other improvements inside, and hopes to transform the building into a wedding hall rental.

The owner of the former Shoppers World is a candidate for city council, and there are questions about what he plans to do with the building besides letting it sit vacant.

“The market is down. I have to do something different,” Alsomiri said.

He also asked for other ideas for the building.

As for the condition of the outside of the building, he said that will have to wait. In the meantime, he said, it’s no worse than “when you close down a house.”

He is running for one of three seats on council.

The Review also asked City Manager Katrina Powell and Kathy Angerer, the Director of Community & Economic Development, about the status of the building.

Angerer replied in an email: “No improvement per-turn the second floor of the two-story building into apartments for seniors.

The ground floor would have been redesigned for commercial use. However, that plan met opposition from some in the community. The plan eventually fell apart.

At one time it was the city’s largest store and part of a regional department store chain called Federal’s.

As that chain began to go bankrupt a fire broke out in the building. It was later taken over by another chain, Shoppers World.

Under Alsomiri’s ownership a small fire broke out in the building a couple of years ago but that caused just a small amount of damage.

Mayor Majewski said in her Facebook post that there is no reason for the building’s continued shabby condition.

“Mr. Alsomiri supposedly has plans in the works for this building,” she said. “That doesn’t prevent him from maintaining it, proceeding with basic renovations, and keeping it cleaned up. He could even have art in the windows in the meantime. There is no excuse for the state it is in now.”

endorsed the state proposal, but in its defeat even he conceded it was too complex for voters to rally around.

Snyder has said he and the legislature will make funding road repairs a top priority in the months to come.

There have been several other options floated in recent weeks, but nothing concrete.

Municipal leaders are worried that the next plan may include reducing state revenue, something many communities – including Hamtramck – won't be able to afford.

The next election date for Hamtramck is Aug. 4 when a primary will be held to whittle down the number of city council candidates vying for three seats. Six out of the nine candidates seeking office will then square off in the November General Election.

Also on the August ballot will be the public school's millage renewal proposal, which was shot down in a special election in February. The school district is seeking the renewal of 18 tax mills for its general operation.

Review: Opinion Page

In Our Opinion

This election season is missing one thing: candidates

Where are the candidates? This year's election for city council attracted very few candidates, which is surprising when you consider three seats will be on the ballot. In past elections we have seen numerous candidates come out. This year we have a paltry nine candidates. Where did everyone go? One theory has it that since the council has little or no decision making authority, what's the point? That is a compelling argument to make. Unfortunately, it is true that the city council has been sidelined while the city transitions back to local control.

It's the city manager and the state's Transition Advisory Board who are in control. We're not sure why that is since it was the city council who asked for the state to intervene when a financial crisis hit. The council at that time did the responsible thing. When the emergency manager left about four months ago, she put strict limitations on the city council. There is also another explanation for such a low interest in public office: It's not worth the abuse. Hamtramck's politics are known to be rough, which understandably is a turnoff to those who might be interested in running for public office. When the state decided to install an emergency manager it was noted that the city had a "toxic" political environment. That's something we all need to work on. While that toxic environment didn't directly lead to the city financial meltdown, it was a contributing factor. Hamtramck is out of a financial emergency, but apparently there are enough people who believe we still have a hostile political environment. That may prove to be a legacy we can't shake off.

Odds & Ends

Correction ... Last week's notification of the May 5 special election had the wrong heading on it, saying it was about the Hamtramck Public Schools' millage renewal. The election on Tuesday was actually for the state proposal to raise the sales tax to support road repairs. That proposal failed. We regret the error and any confusion it may have caused.

Ongoing ... The online fundraiser for Pope Park renovations is still continuing. As of Thursday, the committee sponsoring the fundraiser reported $7,900 had been donated. The goal is to collect at least $25,000 by June 1, which at that point the Michigan Economic Development Corporation will kick in a matching grant of $25,000. To help out, go online to: https://www.patronicity.com/project/pope_park_renovation_hamtramck Or, if you just want to send in a check, that will work, too. To do so, make a check out to the Karol Wojtyla Hamtramck Park Committee, and mail it to that group at: P.O. Box 12248, Hamtramck, MI 48212.

Get a kick out of soccer? The city has a deal for you

Plans are still in the works to bring the Detroit City Football Club to Hamtramck. Organizers are securing funding to move the team to Keyworth Stadium, hopefully by next season. In the meantime, you can get a glimpse of the popular soccer team that now calls Cass Tech home. Thousands of fans have been selling out the Cass Tech stadium for their favorite team, Le Rouge. And now the City of Hamtramck, through its Community & Economic Development Department, is offering residents a special deal. The next soccer match is May 15, and the city is offering free admission and a bus ride to Cass

Tech to see the game. Kathy Angerer, Director of Community and Economic Development, is coordinating the event on behalf of the city. Most of the free tickets are reserved for local school-age soccer players but there are a limited number of tickets for residents. "Soccer is a popular and beloved sport in Hamtramck and partnering with the Detroit City Football Club and Flagstar Bank for this event will be a memorable experience for our youth," Angerer said. "The City of Hamtramck is proud to join with these fine organizations to let our students watch an exciting Le Rouge match at Cass Tech Stadium."

Attending the event will be members of the Hamtramck Warriors Soccer Club and student athletes and supporters from the Hamtramck Public Schools high school and middle school soccer teams. There are a limited number of extra tickets still available by calling Kathy Angerer at (313) 876-7700, extension 326.

The Multicultural Celebration that will be taking place on Tuesday, June 2 has been part of the many wonderful events at Dickinson East Elementary School. This year's celebration will mark the 16th year as a much anticipated and cherished event for years.

The very first Multicultural Celebration began with a pot-luck, buffet-style dinner. Our parents and staff brought in the favorite ethnic foods and the quality and variety of foods was remarkable. The festivities continued onto the playground. The entertainment was varied and highly enjoyable and centered on the diverse cultures that our school had to offer.

This year's celebration starts off with an ice cream social that will surely be enjoyed by all. The entertainment will include many songs and dances from our African American, Albanian, Arabic, Bengali, Bosnian, Indian and Polish students who will be performing as they wear ethnic style clothing representative of their culture.

Everyone is excited about this event and is welcomed to come join the celebration. The administration, staff and students hope to see

Arts festival highlights Hamtramck's border with Detroit

By Mike Murphy
Special to The Review

Exploring Hamtramck/Detroit borders both physically and culturally will be the main agenda on May 16 and 17 when Detroit-based performance company The Hinterlands hosts its premier Porous Borders Festival.

The festival opens at 11 a.m. Saturday with a parade down the length of Carpenter Street followed by performances and artist installations located along many points of the Detroit/Hamtramck border. There will also be 10 other non-artist community projects, such as a talk on the history of the Hamtramck/Detroit border presented by Hamtramck Museum Curator and Historian, Greg Kowalski.

In addition, local artist and organizer Marsha Music will tell stories about organizing Dodge-Main workers. Her presentation will be accompanied by films focused on Dodge Main.

So what is and what isn't the Detroit/Hamtramck border?

For festival co-directors Liza Bielby and Richard Newman, who moved to a home in Detroit just outside Hamtramck about five years ago, the question doesn't always come with an easy answer.

"I live just north of the border on the Detroit side, and people think it's Hamtramck," said Newman, who said his own confusion over the question led him and Bielby to take walks tracing the geographical border, which in turn led the Hinterlands co-directors to think about the cultural borders that exist in the area.

"The festival is a way to explore these different kinds of borders and we hope to spur conversation through the festival and also afterward," Newman said. "Our interest is in getting to know more about our neighborhoods."

Newman said the festival was not geared specifically to relative newcomers to the area and that other parts of the Detroit area, including Canada, will be represented.

"Some of the other artists have lived here their whole life," Newman said.

Newman said the festival project is part of a series of projects planned by the Carpenter Street community, which includes Popp's Packing and other partners in the Carpenter Exchange.

A schedule and map of the festival will be available approximately one week before the event at various locations in Hamtramck and Detroit.

The lore of Hamtramck ...

The Strange death of Thomas X. Dombrowski

By Greg Kowalski

Thomas X. Dombrowski was a Communist. He never denied it. In fact he ran for U.S. Congress in 1940 on the Communist Party ticket.

It was a time before the Communists fell out of favor among the many laborers who initially supported them in America, including Polish immigrants.

Dombrowski was among those auto workers, at least for a while. Born in 1917, he grew up in Cleveland before coming to the Detroit area where he worked at the old Packard plant. He eventually left the assembly line and became editor of the Glos Ludowy, a Communist newspaper that was banned from sales on the streets of Detroit.

Dombrowski apparently had become associated with the Communists while studying at the universities in Warsaw and Krakow. Back in America, he earned a degree in Ohio, and with the Communist Party was sent to work with the auto unions as an "Educational Director."

In those days, the Communists were viewed differently. Although they stood firmly against capitalism they also fought for workers' rights and demanded equality for women and minorities. The workers found them to be allies in their struggles for better pay and working conditions.

That view would change substantially after World War II, especially among the Poles, who watched the Soviets pilage and enslave Poland in the wake of the Nazi occupation.

Before the full extent of the Soviet damage was done, Dombrowski ran for Congress on the Community Party ticket. He also ran for Hamtramck Common Council in 1944 and 1946 but lost both times, although once just narrowly.

By the mid-1950s, the Communists had largely fallen out of favor. They had been denounced by the auto unions and hounded continually by the FBI. Numerous raids were conducted at the old Workmen's Hall on Yemans, which was Dombrowski's election headquarters.

For Dombrowski the end came in May, 1956, while he was in New York at the Polonia Club, a social center where a group of 50 Polish-Americans were being welcomed after returning from a tour of Poland sponsored by the Glos Ludowy.

During the festivities, two armed men stormed into the hall and ordered the people at people, including Dombrowski, who was shot in the chest (or abdomen, accounts vary). Another man was also shot in the abdomen and a third was hit twice in the head. He and Dombrowski died.

The gunmen fled without taking anything. They were browski was disillusioned with the Communist Party and was assassinated by agents on direct orders from Moscow. They might have feared that he was close to becoming an informer for the FBI. Certainly the circumstances of the attack were strange, having occurred in a hall filled with people.

There may be more to this case buried somewhere in the files of the FBI, but we likely will never see them, so his death is likely to remain clouded by questions.

Adding to the odd circumstances is that Dombrowski was killed on May 31, 1956, exactly 26 days after he was married to Estella Nowakowski, who had worked at the newspaper.

You can learn more of Hamtramck's fascinating history at the Hamtramck Historical Museum, 9525 Jos. Campau. Hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and Sunday and by appointment. Call (313) 893-5027.
